Blockchain Instructions

1. Can signatures only be registered by legal representatives?

A: The idea is to maintain a single representative for each of the bidders. This applies to consortiums as well.

2. What is the role of the legal representative and what is the role of the technical representative?

A: Both the legal representative and the technical representative will be able to consult the cycle in which they entered the PPAA and the area(s) in which they were incorporated, in addition to submitting and decrypting proposals. The difference is that the legal representative is the one who can designate or block the technical representative, so that there is not only one user per proponent to access the information.

3. If we already have companies that have registered with password, user and so on, is it salvageable during this round or should it be done from scratch?

A: It could be salvageable; however, for the previous year the number of users was much less. Currently we want to create a digital identity, so it is necessary to carry out the registration considering that previously there was no definition of roles already explained.

4. Can the investment transfer be used for counteroffers?

A: The transfer of investment cannot be part of the offers, nor of the counter-offers, nor of the selection process only, as mentioned a few moments ago, the supplementary value of exclusivity is not part of the selection process and it would be wrong, since it generates different competition conditions for those who have obligations or investments to be transferred compared to those who are a new player.

5. Should the legal representative also be a legal representative within the company?

A: In this case, the provisions of the Terms of Reference apply.
